

OLD BILL IN THE BUSH A Cameroon Trilogy

The North West Province of the Cameroon Republic is as large as Wales and far more remote. When Ian Marsden was sent to take charge of all Federal and Regional Public Works he had a post of professional isolation and challenging variety to fill. Even getting there was an adventure in itself. The Marsden family quickly settled into their bungalow, surrounded by an assortment of expatriates and a handful of trained African technicians, and the work began. Hand broken concrete mixes, weak bridges and volunteer Community Road construction, sweating explosives, and flash floods they just went with the territory. The breadth of the posting was considerable. To the civil engineering road and bridge construction, rural water supply was added hospital, office and housing design and construction, vehicle maintenance, electrical engineering and advice to willing but fallible administrative officers who supervised local government works. Also there were the Wages Boards, Prison visiting, supervising Elections and a wealth of social events. Marsden found himself exercising tact and diplomacy in a tiny and disparate group of individuals while his wife struggled with motherhood and meat club politics. Horses and snakes were an added hazard. Marsden also took up a leadership role in the local Christian churches. Cameroon Trilogy is set in the Southern Cameroons under UN Trusteeship in the 1950s, a fascinating insight into British colonial history prior to the surge towards independence.
